PERSONA 1 | Core Memory Contributor

Name

Margaret Wilson

Age

68

Location

Lewisham, South London

Occupation

Retired primary school teacher

Background / Context

Margaret has lived in London all her life. She grew up around small, everyday local venues – bakeries, pubs, corner shops – that no longer exist. These places hold strong emotional significance for her, as they are tied to family routines and childhood memories. She occasionally visits museums and values cultural heritage, but has never formally contributed to a digital archive. Her relationship with technology is cautious: she mainly uses a tablet for video calls, browsing the web, and emails.

Goals & Motivations

To preserve personal memories of disappearing neighbourhood spaces; to share lived experiences with younger generations; to ensure her memories are not lost when she is no longer able to tell them; to feel that her life experience has cultural value.

Needs

A very low technical barrier to contribution; voice-based input rather than text-heavy forms; gentle prompts to help structure her storytelling; clear reassurance about privacy and how her data is used.

Pain Points

Finds typing slow and tiring; feels intimidated by unfamiliar apps; worries her stories are not important enough; afraid of making mistakes or sharing something accidentally.

"I may not know how to use these apps, but I remember exactly what that place was."
