PERSONA 3 | Accessibility-Driven User

Name

Aisha Rahman

Age

34

Location

Hackney, London

Occupation

Community organiser and accessibility advocate

Background / Context

Aisha is a deaf user and a heavy user of digital technology. She is actively involved in the deaf and hard-of-hearing community and frequently advocates for inclusive design in public cultural institutions. She strongly believes that cultural heritage should be accessible to everyone, regardless of physical ability. She often encounters audio-based content that lacks proper transcription or visual alternatives.

Goals & Motivations

To access oral histories on an equal basis; to engage with London's cultural memory without barriers; to advocate for accessibility as a core design principle, not an add-on.

Needs

Accurate and complete transcripts for all audio content; optional real-time captions when audio is played; clear visual hierarchy and readable layouts; customisable accessibility settings.

Pain Points

Audio-only storytelling excluding deaf users; poor-quality or auto-generated transcripts; accessibility features treated as optional or secondary; feeling overlooked by cultural institutions.

"If the history is only spoken, then it is not really accessible."
